When the jury entered the station iel Morgan Woodhouse, colored, a waiter at the Kenmore, who saw Avers' body in the latter's room by looking through the strange noises in his room during the house says, he looked through the keyhole, and saw the body lying on the floor with blood upon it. Going down stairs, he told Miss Minas of his discovery Drude, took a ladder to the fourth floor of the building, and looking through the transom to Ayers' door, they saw the body, as heretofore described.

The witness said he then returned to his Ayers came to the house to board a Philip Dade waited on the table occupied by Ayers, he said. This table was only a short distance from the tables waited on by the witness. Woodhouse said he had frequently talked to Ayers, principally upon medical subjects. He then told of breakfast between 7 and 8:30 o'clock.

of the exterior of the hotel and pointed by the various boarders. He did not know who notified the police of the finding of the body of Ayers, and District Attorney Gould questioned the witness closely. Miss Minas; according to Woodhouse, had spoken to him about the matter about 8:30 o'clock. She did not seem excited, the witness declared, and he did not think that she an to him. John Ray waited on Miss Minas' table, the witness said.
